Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

The incidence of gynecological cancer has gradually increased in recent decades, and given the fact that novel advances in the perioperative and postoperative management of various forms of cancer forms the implications for research.

In this Special Issue, we seek contributions either in the form of original research articles, reviews, or shorter perspective articles on all potential fields of gynecological cancer. Suggested potential topics include but are not limited to the pre-operative management of patients, perioperative factors that affect survival rates and rates of morbidity outcomes and postoperative modes of adjuvant treatment and their impact on patient outcomes.

We hope that leading experts will share their perspective on the clinical management and outcome of patients with gynecological cancer and will contribute to current knowledge with novel evidence that will provide the groundwork for further research.
