Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

Cardiac arrhythmias and arrhythmogenic disorders represent a significant area of concern within cardiology by their prevalence and potential for severe clinical outcomes.

This Special Issue aims to delve into the multifaceted clinical dimensions of cardiac arrhythmias and arrhythmogenic disorders, presenting the latest research, clinical experiences, and therapeutic advancements to provide a comprehensive resource for professionals in the field about the following topics:

the epidemiology and etiology of cardiac arrhythmias; advances in diagnostic techniques, including imaging and electrophysiological studies; the pathophysiology and molecular mechanisms underlying arrhythmogenic disorders; clinical management and therapeutic interventions, including pharmacological treatments and catheter ablation; genetic and hereditary factors in arrhythmogenic disorders; risk stratification and the prevention of sudden cardiac death; innovations in device therapy, such as pacemakers and implantable cardioverter defibrillators; the impact of lifestyle factors and comorbidities on the progression and management of arrhythmias.

We look forward to receiving your submissions.
