Message from the Guest Editor

The management of urological cancers has dramatically changed in the last 20 years; with the introduction of several technological innovations and the refinement of minimally invasive techniques, surgical oncologic treatment algorithms have become more and more complex.

In fact, the role of major oncologic surgery, in most cases considered the gold standard for the treatment of localised urological neoplasms, has lately been downsized, with new organ-sparing options being recommended as the first-line treatment by international guidelines.

The evolution of imaging has also had a crucial role in enhancing targeted and minimally invasive treatments. The refinement of robotic surgery has contributed to the lower morbidity of major surgery.

In this Special Issue of JCM, we aim to publish up-to-date reports on the new challenges in uro-oncology under the motto of “less is more”.
