Message from the Guest Editor

Coronary artery disease (CAD) is a critical health challenge that affects both people and healthcare systems. This Special Issue will address the following:

1. Diagnostic technologies enabling early detection and risk assessment.
2. Recent advancements in drugs that drastically ameliorate platelet disorders, lipid reduction, and angina.
3. Advances in invasive treatments, notably percutaneous coronary intervention (PCI) and coronary artery bypass grafting (CABG).
4. The significance of lifestyle changes and cardiac rehabilitation in CAD management.
5. Therapeutic options and patient recovery and rehabilitation.
6. Medications and supplements.
7. Recent advancements in lipids modifications – Lp(α).
8. Smoking, second-hand smoke and the cessation of e-cigarettes.
9. Hormone Replacement Therapy (HRT).
10. Research on the design of new avenues in CAD therapy, from breakthrough medications to collaborative multidisciplinary care paradigms.

In this review, novel medicines, significant breakthroughs, and contemporary developments in clinical practices that collectively influence CAD and aortic disease.
