Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

Breast cancer surgery and breast reconstruction are probably among the most discussed (and sometimes controversial) topics of the past two centuries.

Cancer surgery and reconstruction procedures have been evolved in time and now are often thought as one in the same.

Correct planning takes a crucial role: to plan an excellent demolition to ensure satisfactory reconstruction (as well as local cancer treatment).

This Special Issue of Journal of clinical medicine entitled “Making and Management of Breast Reconstruction: from Theory to Clinical Practice” welcomes the submission of basic or clinical original articles, as well as systematic reviews, meta-analyses, and overviews, that discuss limits and points of strength of techniques for breast reconstruction as well as innovations and evolutions in this field.
