Regenerative Medicine for Longevity and Aesthetics

Message from the Guest Editors

Understanding the aging of each of the five main levels of our biology (cell, tissue, organ, organ system and organism) is the core task of the new branch of research longevity medicine. The search for a single cause—and therefore a cure—for aging has been replaced by the view that it is a highly complex process with many causes. Deciphering this process and the responsible causes is the most exciting task of our time. The latest findings from longevity research are frequently intertwined with regenerative medicine and aesthetic applications. In this Special Issue, we would therefore like to shed light on this revolutionary field of research, particularly within its interface with regenerative aesthetic medicine and surgery.
