Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

For more than a year now, the world has been facing one of the most aggressive pandemics it has ever known. Numerous discoveries have led to progress in understanding, treating, and preventing COVID-19 infection, but there are still many grey areas that need to be addressed to better understand this disease. This Special Issue of the Journal of Personalized Medicine aims to highlight the current state of the science and showcase some of the latest findings in the field of COVID-19. Research on COVID-19 must be an international priority in view of the human and economic implications of the pandemic.
