Great strides have been made in HIV testing and treatment over the last 30 years, the management of HIV can benefit from more individualized care. Personalized medicine (PM) has the potential to tailor prevention and care interventions to optimize safety, effectiveness and patient satisfaction.

This Special Issue is focused on describing current personalized medicine approaches to HIV care. This encompasses efforts to deliver individualized care using modern technologies and innovative care models for HIV prevention, comorbidities (hepatitis C, cardiovascular, neurocognitive decline, etc.) and treatment so as to improve the length and quality of life of HIV/AIDS patients.

This Special Issue will bring together cutting-edge research across disciplines, including the basic sciences, clinical care and the behavioral and social sciences, in order to better understand and intervene to the benefit of people living with HIV.

The aim of this Special Issue is to collate evidence-based manuscripts on relevant topics in the field. Research articles, clinical studies, quantitative and qualitative analyses of pilot studies, meta-analyses, and reviews are all welcome.
