Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

This Special Issue of the Journal of Personalized Medicine aims to highlight the current state of the research and current practice on personalized medicines in cardiovascular disease. It aims to collect, share, and expand knowledge on the early detection and prevention of cardiovascular disease requires clinical epidemiologic, pharmacologic, biochemical, pathophysiological, and equipment studies, which enable a personalized approach to the choice of treatment. Moreover, we are pleased to invite you to submit papers with the results of basic and clinical research on cardiovascular disease aimed at improving the technologies for the prevention, diagnosis, risk assessment, and treatment of cardiovascular disease from the standpoint of personalized medicine. Research articles, clinical studies, and reviews are all welcome.
