Emergency Medicine: Updates on Personalized Diagnosis, Treatment, and Management

Message from the Guest Editor

The world of emergency medicine is undergoing a major reorganization and is facing new challenges in increasingly crowded hospitals by honing skills for the recognition and treatment of critical conditions of increasingly complex patients. It is necessary to analyze this system and its critical aspects in order to rethink its structure and function. It is necessary to accept that different types of emergencies may need to be managed individually. In this scenario, it will be necessary to design new systems that recognize and treat general acute health situations, as well as those that will become more frequent, such as in instances of unrecognized geriatric health problems. It will also be essential to establish optimal diagnostic and therapeutic pathways for both acute and rare diseases.
