Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

The recurring nature of global financial and health crises has made greater challenges for corporate risk management resulting from corruption and agency issues. Despite improvements in good governance, transparency, and accountability through regulations, reforms, disclosure, market mechanisms, etc. in the last few decades or so, sound financial and risk management remain at stake to maintain sustainable business operations due to global shocks and associated corruption and agency problems.

This Special Issue focuses on the broad topic of “Corporate Governance in Global Shocks and Risk Management” and includes rigorous research on governance risk associated with global crises, pandemic, and agency and corruption risks. Manuscripts featuring original research that complements our understanding of new ideas, innovation, and challenges to mitigate governance risk in today’s complex world as well as contribution through rich data analysis are encouraged.
