Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

A supply chain network is an integrated system of resources that collaborate to facilitate the production and distribution of products and services. It covers all activities in the network, ranging from raw material suppliers through product design, production, and ultimately to consumers. The resources involved that enable the processes may belong to one organization or multiple collaborating organizations. The role of supply chain management is to actively manage all of the resources involved in order to ensure the efficient flow of products and services and to maximize the system performance. Decision-makers at all stages of a network need to be equipped with knowledge and decision tools to enable effective and efficient management.
