Message from the Guest Editors

In a contemporary world stricken by a global pandemic, climate change, assets neglect, job loss, and isolation, cultural and social innovations are becoming increasingly fundamental. Social innovation, cultural heritage enhancement, and creative enterprises are able to redesign sustainable, inclusive living spaces open to local and international cooperation, as also proposed by the New European Bauhaus framework.

This Special Issue welcomes multidisciplinary research, with theoretical, methodological and empirical (qualitative and/or quantitative) approaches, addressing the role of cultural and social innovation in contemporary city development. Scholars, researchers, and practitioners are invited to present their contributions on one or more of the following topics:

- Social innovation, sustainable development and new urban dynamics;
- Creative urban regeneration and cultural heritage enhancement;
- Collaborative processes for urban regeneration: co-design of community spaces and enterprises;
- Social innovation in economic development and social place-based policies
