Message from the Guest Editors

Landscape architecture has undergone continuous expansion beyond the confines of the 19th-century arts–science binary narrative. The interdisciplinary integration of technology in landscape design, evaluation, and management is pivotal in redefining the boundaries of this discipline. Therefore, it is crucial to explore diverse technologies, propose novel inquiry methods, and develop innovative design strategies to support the growth and advancement of landscape architecture.

This Special Issue welcomes articles that explore research outcomes that could be applied to the practice of landscape architecture. Reviews and perspective articles that discuss the development and importance of identifying technologies for landscape architecture, especially as regards the design, evaluation, management and other related topics, are also welcome.
