This Special Issue is dedicated to exploring the intricate challenges within obstetrics and gynecology, emphasizing two vital domains: obstetrics, encompassing pregnancy and labor-related pathologies, and gynecology, focusing on minimally invasive surgeries, gynecological pathologies like endometriosis, and malignancies.

In obstetrics, our aim is to delve into critical issues such as eclampsia and other pathologies that arise during pregnancy and labor. We seek to illuminate the complexities, understand underlying mechanisms, and propose innovative approaches for the management and prevention of these conditions. By addressing these challenges, we aim to enhance maternal health and improve pregnancy outcomes globally.

Within gynecology, our focus spans across minimally invasive surgical techniques like laparoscopic and robot-assisted procedures, revolutionizing gynecological interventions. Additionally, our scope includes investigating prevalent conditions such as endometriosis and gynecological malignancies. We strive to advance knowledge, treatment modalities, and prognostic strategies for these conditions, aiming to optimize patient care and outcomes.
