Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

Heart failure currently affects millions of patients worldwide, involving substantial morbidity and mortality. It therefore represents a major burden for public healthcare.

The therapeutic options are as diverse as the etiologies, ranging from drug therapy to assist device implantation or cardiac transplantation. Thus, decision making from a multidisciplinary heart failure team perspective has become mandatory. Recent advances in both medical and device therapy have improved the overall prognosis of this complex disease, but are leading to an increase of prevalence of chronic heart failure in the general population. In this sense, the scientific community has focused its efforts on continuing to improve the prognosis and quality of life of these patients, and the number of publications on heart failure is experiencing exponential growth.

In this Special Issue of Life, we invite all types of heart failure professionals to submit their most recent clinical or experimental findings in the field.

We would like to thank you for your collaboration.
