Message from the Guest Editors

Maritime transport remains one of the key components of the supply chain, thereby ensuring the continued existence of international trade. It is very important to consider the fact that maritime transport is not only transportation from one point to another, but it also includes many components and elements, such as seaports, their activities, organization of their activities, use of vehicles to carry freight or passengers, their technical data or state-of-the-art technological solutions. It should also be noted that maritime transport, just like all the links of the supply chain, requires the application of innovative managerial and organizational solutions related to the optimization of activities, risk management and modelling of certain situations or tasks.

Therefore, we invite you to contribute to this issue by submitting comprehensive reviews, case studies, or research articles. Papers selected for this Special Issue are subject to a rigorous peer review procedure with the aim of rapid and wide dissemination of research results, developments, and applications.
