Message from the Guest Editor

In light of the significant challenges and transformations observed in the delivery of mental health services during the recent global pandemic, this Special Issue seeks to delve deep into the innovations, adaptations, and resilience of mental health service providers and systems. The aim is not just to document the changes during the pandemic but to draw valuable lessons and insights that can shape the future of emergency mental health service delivery.

We believe your expertise and insights in this field would greatly benefit our readers and contribute significantly to this body of knowledge.

Key topics include (but are not limited to):

- Innovations in emergency mental health delivery during the pandemic;
- Challenges and barriers faced by service providers;
- Studies showcasing adaptability and resilience;
- Long-term implications and strategies for future crisis preparedness;
- Studies, e.g., COVID-19 outbreak, preventive measures, etc.;
- Studies related to leadership and clinical governance;
- Special sections: youth mental health, neuropsychiatry, etc.
