Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

This Special Issue aims to identify and systematize four broad issues: (i) an updated comparison of the current situation of young people in the labor market, collecting evidence from many countries; (ii) the general and persistent reasons for the greater difficulties of young people in the labor market; (iii) the characteristics of the impact of the COVID-19 crisis on youth unemployment and on young workers; (iv) the opportunities possibly accruing for young people in the new economy characterizing the post-COVID world.

In this Special Issue, original research articles and reviews are welcome. Research areas may include (but are not limited to) the following: (i) investigations regarding the situation of young people (unemployment, type of jobs, characteristics of the transition from school to work, etc.) in the labor market, either in individual countries or in an international comparative analysis; (ii) study of the impact of the COVID-19 crisis; (iii) analysis of the evolving situation—after the pandemic shock—in industries and occupations and their impact on the employment of young workers.
