Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

This Special Issue focuses on factors that modulate brain function and may have the potential of influencing its functions in the long run. On the one hand, the brain depends on a steady and sufficient supply of oxygen and dietary ingredients for proper functioning. On the other hand, genetic predispositions and epigenetic and environmental factors may influence brain development and functioning. The goal of this Special Issue is to showcase state-of-the-art contributions discussing the role of cues that are implicated in cognitive functions. Mechanistic as well as epidemiological studies in vitro, in vivo, and on human subjects will be considered for publication. We encourage the submission of original research articles, reviews, and meta-analyses. Potential topics may include but are not limited to the nervous system, neurogenesis, mechanisms of cognitive function, brain development, brain aging, microbiome and brain, genetic modifications, genetic engineering, polymorphisms, age-related brain dysfunction, dietary bioactives, malnutrition, nutrition and chronic conditions, genetic predisposition, metabolism, and omics.
