Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

According to the World Health Organization, of the four most prevalent infectious diseases, the incidences of tuberculosis, malaria, and human immunodeficiency virus are declining (the former two since 1990; the third since 2005), and only hepatitis B and C (HBV and HCV, respectively) are continuing to rise in their incidence. These two viruses can cause severe liver fibrosis as well as hepatocellular carcinoma (HCC). More recently, steatotic liver disease (SLD) has also become a major cause of HCC with and without cirrhosis. There are major developments in the treatment of these diseases.
