Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

Nanotechnology has opened up unique opportunities for diagnosis and treatment options due to particularities such as size, functionalization potential, as well as multimodal and synchronous mechanisms of action on living cells. This Special Edition is aiming to gather novel insights into the most recent directions toward nanotechnology-mediated diagnosis and treatment of human disease. Studies on nanopharmaceutic solutions designed for widely studied pathologies such as cancer, antimicrobial applications, and osteoregenerative applications are welcomed, together with more recent orientations, such as hematology, tissue regeneration, etc. Photothermal, nanotargeting, direct toxicity or other mechanistic approaches will equally find a place in this issue. Evaluations of pharmacological biodistribution and bioavailability, pharmacokinetics, and toxicity for newly designed nanostructures, as part of human disease prevention and diagnosis are also welcomed. High-quality theoretical reviews opening the path to novel pharmaceutical applications of nanoparticles in the diagnosis and treatment of human disorders will also be an integral part of this issue.
