Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

The materials used in dentistry, given the especially harsh conditions they must endure, have always been of a high quality, both in terms of technology and development. In today's world, this premise remains absolutely valid. The new bleaching materials, restorers, or regenerators have important research works and developments that make this area a constantly evolving field. Polymeric materials, given the large number of situations in which they can be used, are one of the groups that have aroused the most interest in this evolution. This volume will be focused on the latest advances in this section.
