Fiber-Reinforced Polymer Composites: Fabrication, Characterization and Application

Message from the Guest Editor

In recent decades, research on polymer science and technology has successfully developed a variety of fiber-reinforced polymer composites focusing on current topics of interest. The performance of composite materials that can withstand extreme environments, such as space, the deep sea, and the polar regions beyond the laboratory, is dazzling. In particular, the discovery and application of composite materials that enable new growth engines such as e-mobility are highly practical and important. In this Special Issue, we discuss the state-of-the-art technologies and methods for these materials. We highlight new developments and applications in structural or functional materials and their composites. We welcome in-depth and comprehensive research into the physicochemical and mechanistic fundamentals relevant to this field.
