Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

This Special Issue explores classic questions and new challenges in the study of ethics in business and other professional contexts from the perspective of both religious studies and comparative theology. We aim to consider both these developments in exploring the relationship of religiously informed moral theory and comparative theology as it applies to business and related professional contexts, and also to challenging moral issues arising in the global economy in a time of pandemic. These contemporary challenges include the effects of COVID-19 on the global economy and business institutions, the impact of the changing regulatory environment, the impact of societal calls for racial justice and resistance to environmental degradation, as well as more personal and micro questions such as the impact of work demands and professional commitments on questions of vocation, family life, and service to the community. We seek articles which explore these theoretical questions and offer practical solutions with specific attention to diverse geographical and religious contexts and the various disciplines which impact the study of business.

Message from the Editorial Board

Fresh developments in the disciplines that consistently make significant contributions to our understanding of religious personality, authority, devotion, and community - disciplines ranging from psychology, sociology, and anthropology to history, art history, philosophy, literary criticism, and political science – fuel general, as well as scholarly, interest in the world's religions.

Religions is inviting innovative and comparative contributions. Please consider Religions as an exceptional, exciting enterprise ready to reward your trust, attention, and participation.
