Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

The nature, status, and functions of Christian doctrine are widely and energetically discussed in contemporary theology. This Special Issue welcomes submissions that emerge from this broad framework and/or address topics such as the following:

- The relationship between change, constancy, and diversity in Christian doctrine, especially in relation to climate, sexuality, gender, and race;
- Critical studies of recent proposals (e.g., Christine Helmer, Mike Higton, David Bentley Hart, Anne E. Carpenter, Willie James Jennings);
- How biblical exegesis is employed in constructive doctrinal work;
- Studies of particular doctrinal loci in particular contexts;
- The role of doctrine in making Christian truth claims;
- The role of particular doctrines in forming, deforming, and reforming the Christian imagination;
- The role of, or the impact of, certain doctrines in inter-religious encounters.
