Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

Religions are generally framed in a communal setting. A community can be defined as a group of people who have formed social bonds, who function within certain boundaries, are connected to a place (physical or virtual), and have common characteristics and/or interests. A community can share a common geographical location, a culture, or a history, but can also be independent of place or origin and could instead be built around shared interests and beliefs.

This Special Issue of the journal Religions will focus on religious communities. We invite historians, philosophers, sociologists, and scholars of religion, mass communication, and political science to address a range of subjects that relate to these topics.

Message from the Editorial Board

Fresh developments in the disciplines that consistently make significant contributions to our understanding of religious personality, authority, devotion, and community - disciplines ranging from psychology, sociology, and anthropology to history, art history, philosophy, literary criticism, and political science – fuel general, as well as scholarly, interest in the world's religions.

Religions is inviting innovative and comparative contributions. Please consider Religions as an exceptional, exciting enterprise ready to reward your trust, attention, and participation.
