Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

This symposium seeks critical essays on “Jewish Theological Ideologies.”

In promoting a particular perspective of a given religious tradition theology, as well as philosophy, are often inflected with political ideologies—the impulse, to cite Robert Musil, “to carry ideas into the spheres of power” (Man Without Qualities). This is particularly pronounced in contemporary Judaism where one speaks of Religious Zionism, Religious identity, indeed, of political theology, and even of theo-politics. This issue of Religion seeks to gather critical reflections on the dialectic of theology and ideology in Jewish thought.
