Message from the Guest Editor

Throughout the years, Islamists in the Muslim Brotherhood, Al-Nahda and other organizations have developed a wide-ranging discourse to express their views on Islamist politics, but how have post-Islamists reinterpreted, dismissed or reinforced these ideas to give meaning to their new positions? In other words: what ideological impact does post-Islamism have? This Special Issue seeks to address the understudied subject of the conceptual and ideological underpinnings of post-Islamism. As such, it strives to contribute to our knowledge of developing ideas among religious organizations and parties in general and to those of post-Islamist ones and their transition from their Islamist predecessors in particular.
