Religion and Prison: Practices, Actors, Spaces, and Challenges of Pluralism

Message from the Guest Editors

Religion in prison could be considered a mature and well-established research area, especially for sociological and anthropological academic literature. A branch of these studies has paved the way to analysing how institutions are facing the pluralist challenge of growing religious diversity inhabiting prison (Beckford, Gilliat 1998). This promising line of research becomes increasingly important in a social and political context in which a balanced and forward-looking management of cultural and religious plurality in public institutions appears to be threatened by a temptation to rely on securitarian policies that, with Ragazzi (2016), we could call “policed multiculturalism”. This Special Issue aims to collect original and inspiring research and/or methods papers concerning religion and religious diversity in prison, based on actual situations and depicting which significant changes are underway in different countries. Qualitative research papers are preferred.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

Fresh developments in the disciplines that consistently make significant contributions to our understanding of religious personality, authority, devotion, and community – disciplines ranging from psychology, sociology, and anthropology to history, art history, philosophy, literary criticism, and political science – fuel general, as well as scholarly, interest in the world's religions.

Religions is inviting innovative and comparative contributions. Please consider Religions as an exceptional, exciting enterprise ready to reward your trust, attention, and participation.
