

Special Issue

The Intersection of Phenomenology and Religion

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue explores the intersection of phenomenology and religion. While a scholar's primary subject of study may be religious phenomena, the way that scholar understands phenomenology affects their approach to religion. This Special Issue focuses on the question of the interplay of the two fields, phenomenology and religion, and explores a conceptual framework to bridge them. We are pleased to invite articles that can shed light on the space where phenomenology and religion intersect. Articles can focus on a reflective analysis of one's approach itself or other authors' approaches; a case study of how one's approach works in specific cases; or specific components of religion, such as rituals, experiences, community building, belief systems, and institutionalization. This Special Issue welcomes the submission diverse papers, as far as they clearly articulate and contribute to our collective understanding of the intersection between phenomenology and religion, as described above. We look forward to receiving your contributions.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

Fresh developments in the disciplines that consistently make significant contributions to our understanding of religious personality, authority, devotion, and community – disciplines ranging from psychology, sociology, and anthropology to history, art history, philosophy, literary criticism, and political science – fuel general, as well as scholarly, interest in the world's religions.

Religions is inviting innovative and comparative contributions. Please consider Religions as an exceptional, exciting enterprise ready to reward your trust, attention, and participation.
