Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

This Special Issue focuses on how immigrants fare in the receiving countries. The adaptation process can refer to many outcomes, such as economic mobility, employment, social integration, housing, and access to health care, and migrants arriving in a new country can have many different experiences, which depend on a variety of factors. The mode of incorporation may lead to a variety of outcomes at their destination and how migrants get to their destination may result in different employment outcomes, since legal status can act as a bridge to “good jobs” while being undocumented may limit economic adaptation. The mode of incorporation may also determine class status upon arrival, which could be consequential for adaptation. Selectivity among migrants means that they may bring a variety of types of capital with them which may impact the adaptation process, such as, for example, social capital, cultural capital, physical capital, human capital, and other factors that could contribute to better/worse adaptation.

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Societies (ISSN 2075-4698) is an interdisciplinary journal that brings together different scientific approaches to engage with societal questions to enhance our understanding of the social realm throughout history. The journal publishes original empirical research papers, literature reviews, and conceptual papers. Our aim is to publish papers that have a significant impact on addressing present and emerging societal questions. Therefore, we encourage researchers to publish their results in as much detail as possible. For empirical research papers and literature reviews, all experimental details must be provided, so that the results are reproducible. We also encourage the publication of timely theoretical pieces on topics of interest to existing and emerging societal questions. Papers are either published in the open journal or in Special Issues devoted to specific topics of interest to the field.
