Message from the Guest Editors

Communicating about health has been at the core of a range of interventions in communication for development, public health, media studies, and development studies for decades. We have seen changes in the types of interventions, the subjects, the scale, and the diversity of health challenges over time, and the need for innovation and critical reflection on how communication can best be harnessed to promote social change, positive health outcomes, and support community development objectives. This Special Issue seeks to present a diversity of critical reflections on the intersection of health and communication from a range of perspectives: across disciplines, geographies, social groups, and health challenges.

This Special Issue is open to contributions from academics and practitioners across these areas. Contributions can be articles, conceptual papers, or reviews that are related to this theme, welcoming new ideas, problematizing the ideas and theories of “health” and “communication”, and presenting critical contributions to generate discussion and the continued development of thinking in this realm.

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Societies (ISSN 2075-4698) is an interdisciplinary journal that brings together different scientific approaches to engage with societal questions to enhance our understanding of the social realm throughout history. The journal publishes original empirical research papers, literature reviews, and conceptual papers. Our aim is to publish papers that have a significant impact on addressing present and emerging societal questions. Therefore, we encourage researchers to publish their results in as much detail as possible. For empirical research papers and literature reviews, all experimental details must be provided, so that the results are reproducible. We also encourage the publication of timely theoretical pieces on topics of interest to existing and emerging societal questions. Papers are either published in the open journal or in Special Issues devoted to specific topics of interest to the field.
