Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

The phrase "racial identity politics" has long engendered consternation, applause, and skepticism. From warnings that race has no biological basis despite its social significance to notions that group expectations are as liberating as they are restricting, research on racial identity politics has generated much insight about the perils and promises of group association. This Special Issue on "Rethinking Racial Identity Politics" examines the relevance of racial identity politics for governance in contemporary heterogeneous societies.

Manuscripts of original research are invited that address issues related to: political attitudes or behavior; the formation, maintenance, or collapse of organizations and networks; the quality of democracy; and housing, immigration, policing, and other policy arenas where race is and has been politicized.

Manuscripts that employ quantitative, qualitative, and mixed-method approaches, that are comparative, and that focus on a specific locale are encouraged. As sponsored by KU, article processing charges are waived for this Special Issue of Societies.

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Societies (ISSN 2075-4698) is an interdisciplinary journal that brings together different scientific approaches to engage with societal questions to enhance our understanding of the social realm throughout history. The journal publishes original empirical research papers, literature reviews, and conceptual papers. Our aim is to publish papers that have a significant impact on addressing present and emerging societal questions. Therefore, we encourage researchers to publish their results in as much detail as possible. For empirical research papers and literature reviews, all experimental details must be provided, so that the results are reproducible. We also encourage the publication of timely theoretical pieces on topics of interest to existing and emerging societal questions. Papers are either published in the open journal or in Special Issues devoted to specific topics of interest to the field.
