Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

Labor markets worldwide are currently experiencing significant changes, especially due to the increasing influence of big technological companies and geopolitical power reconfigurations

The topics that will be covered include, but are not limited to, the following:

- Novel methodological approaches to studying non-standard employment and the related health outcomes;
- Recent trends in non-standard forms of employment and their effects on worker health and wellbeing;
- Factors that trigger and facilitate non-standard employment and their relationship with worker health and wellbeing;
- Less explored forms of non-standard employment;
- Barriers to applying labor and occupational health and safety legislation in non-standard forms of employment;
- How non-standard forms of employment interact with worker health and wellbeing;
- The differential impact of non-standard forms of employment on worker health and wellbeing;
- The cumulative and long-term effects of non-standard forms of employment on worker health and wellbeing;
- Potential solutions to address non-standard
