Message from the Guest Editors

The 30th anniversary of the first online media, which takes place in 2024, marks a milestone to assess the current issues and challenges faced by contemporary journalism. This Special Issue seeks to collect research concerning the definition and characterization of the field to the last AI developments assisting journalists and the ethics involved. This Special Issue encourages research on high-quality digital journalistic content—investigative journalism, narrative journalism, multimedia reporting, collaborative journalism—and the challenging conditions of production. We seek to receive innovative approaches relying on a wide range of social science-based methodologies. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Definition of contemporary digital journalism;
- Challenges in digital journalism production and content distribution;
- Innovation in connecting with diverse audiences and communities;
- Funding digital journalism;
- Application of AI and ethical issues;
- Quality digital journalistic storytelling and modalities;
- Profiles, skills and training of digital journalists.
