Human Trafficking: Social, Economic, and Political Contexts

Message from the Guest Editor

Researchers have provided a range of scholarship on the crime of human trafficking that aids in the understanding of the crime, its prevalence, and contemporary challenges. Yet, more work is needed for a full range of understanding of human trafficking worldwide. For this Special Issue, we are looking for original research on human trafficking crimes that uses a macro sociological approach to examine systematic patterns of human behavior and their connections to human trafficking through social, economic, and political systems. Hence, we invite contributions to this Special Issue from researchers exploring how social systems interact with human trafficking crimes.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Social Sciences is an international, open access, peer-reviewed journal publishing the latest research across all disciplines of the social sciences, including anthropology, economics, law, linguistics, education, geography, history, political science, psychology, sociology, and other related areas. The journal is especially interested in interdisciplinary research, and aims to encourage creative, innovative, and critical reflections across social science disciplines. The journal welcomes conventional length articles, shorter Research Notes or articles, as well as Special Issue submissions, as long as they meet the journal's standards of quality and originality.
