Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

Public transportation was profoundly impacted by the COVID-19 pandemic in terms of modal share, passenger volume, origin–destination travel time, vehicle frequency, social distancing, and safety concerns. The survivability and sustainability of public transportation has been called into question.

This Special Issue intends to provide in-depth analysis on sustainability in public transportation along several dimensions, namely, planning and policy, financing and economics, technologies and big data, sociodemographics, modal and international case studies, etc. Based on these theoretical and empirical studies, some policy and planning recommendations may be put forward. Topics include but are not limited to:

- Planning and policy of sustainable public transportation;
- New technologies for sustainable public transportation in the era of big data; The impact of COVID-19 on the sustainability of public transportation;
- Innovative financing and sustainable public transportation;
- Aging and elder-friendly sustainable public transportation;
- Racial equity and socio-environmental justice associated with public transportation;
- New methodologies and case studies.
