Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

In today's competitive environment, supply chain managers attempt to maximize profits and minimize their costs, due to increased concerns about reducing raw materials, increasing waste, increasing pollutants, spreading pollution and given that failure to observe ethical issues and responsibilities will increase costs.

The main aim of this special issue is in about operationalizing sustainability in productions and supply chain management areas (e.g. green logistic management, sustainable or green supplier evaluation and selection, green lean production, application of decision making techniques in sustainable supply chain and operations management, green manufacturing, green lean manufacturing, sustainable supply chain performance, evaluation of sustainable supply chain risks, green operations, green reverse supply chain network, green procurement).
