Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

The special issue aims to include recent research on analyzing the role of academic motivation in student well-being. With contributions from leading researchers in the field of educational psychology we try to establish a useful and relevant research collection linked to academic motivation and its impact on student performance and well-being.

More specifically, we seek to explore the student's academic well-being in their ability to autonomously and efficiently manage knowledge, beliefs, emotions and strategies, at a motivational and cognitive level; We also look for research on self-regulated learning that observes learners as agents of their own learning process; Knowing how student well-being relates to their decision making regarding academic engagement and self-regulated construction of knowledge will also be relevant.
