Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue aims at addressing some of the key problems related to marine recreational fisheries, contributing to improving scientific information and decision-making about this activity. Topics to be address include sampling surveys; innovative tools to address data collection on MRF; biology and physiology of caught/target fishes; invasive fishes and MRF; catch-and-release-related issues; the effect of climate change on MFR; ecological, biological, and socioeconomic impacts of MRF; stakeholder involvement and integration on MRF data collection and management; existing and innovative management and governance arrangements; and case studies aiming at analyzing the relevance of such fisheries in relation to ecological and socioeconomic sustainability.
