The purpose of this Special Issue of Sustainability is to capture the global pandemic year from a sustainability perspective. The scope of the issue will be responses to the pandemic, from the perspectives of any and all disciplines. The issue is purposely designed to attract publications from a diverse range of disciplines, from medical to political, legal to scientific, and everything in between. The focus of the issue is establishing within the literature how we have responded to this first year in the pandemic—socially, culturally, medically, legally, scientifically, etc., within the sphere of sustainability. There are many definitions of sustainability, and therefore, in this Special Issue, the definition of sustainability is given its widest possible meaning.
