Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

The following research is welcome for this Special Issue:

To examine the role of business innovation in the pursuit of private and public benefits in the context of SE.

To explore how innovative and ethical behaviour occur and are fostered/hindered by various enablers and/or barriers to achieving profit maximisation, sustainable growth and generating social benefits.

To investigate the different conceptualisations of sustainability such as ‘farm to fork’; ‘cradle to cradle’ or the ‘circular economy’ to allow for or induce reframing entrepreneurial activity.

To enable regional and country-level comparisons and explore the potential for cross-transfer benefits.

To understand innovative behaviours and meanings of sustainable performance among various socio-geographical contexts and different economic and technological stages.

To examine how business models, support the communalization of sustainability and contribution to business performance in the start, growth and success of SE.

To investigate the role of citizens in participating in SE and influencing local decision-making that can yield long-term benefits.
