Message from the Guest Editors

Organizational behavior, as a solid and well-established scientific area, can bring important insights into thinking about sustainability issues in organizations. We consider that “sustainability dimensions are not understood to be restrictions for the business or the politics or legal regulations, but rather they are highly recommended as they generate value to the business” (Henriques, Matos and Jerónimo, 2022). Accordingly, combining business sustainability with organizational behavior is a natural alliance. Such an alliance has the potential to contribute to the development of sustainable organizations based on their human capital.

This Special Issue calls for original research on the crossroad of sustainability and organizational behavior. It intends to provide new avenues to reflect and reimagine the challenges, opportunities and long-term outcomes of sustainability in the organizational arena. Theoretical and empirical contributions, either qualitative or quantitative, are welcome.
