Message from the Guest Editors

Sustainability is announcing a Special Issue dedicated to the topics of community resilience and sustainable livelihood development. This Special Issue will provide an outlet for cutting-edge praxis research by scholars who contribute insight into theoretical development in these domains.

We are particularly interested in scholarly analyses, especially rigorous case study analyses, that generate novel and innovative insights around the following questions:

Could resilience be a meta-narrative for integrative development praxis?

What are the strengths and limitations of normative and descriptive depictions of resilience in promoting livelihood development?

How does context (geo-political, socio-economic, and cultural) influence the interpretation of community resilience and sustainable livelihood development?

What wants, hopes, and aspirations (e.g., justice, equity, rights, empowerment, self-determination, and inclusion) are being sacrificed to sustain livelihoods and build resilience in the Global South?

Can the persistence, adaptation, and transformation of livelihoods be simultaneously supported for resilient development?
