Message from the Guest Editors

CSR is an innovative and promising area that generates great interest not only among academics but also among the companies themselves. One of the most important of these involves the measurement of CSR, since the literature on this topic is inconsistent and lacks practical maturity. This Special Issue is focused on filling this gap in the research, specifically on socially Responsible Human Resource Management (SR-HRM). There is a need to improve understanding of this discipline by establishing mechanisms that effectively allow its evaluation and comparison in a systematic way. In this sense, we invite you to send your contributions on measurement instruments to evaluate aspects including but not limited to:

- The contribution of talent management to CSR;
- The relationship between organizational behavior and CSR;
- The measurement of Social Responsibility within HRM;
- SR-HRM as a process to promote employees' well-being;
- Evaluation of environmental, economic, and social aspects of SR-HRM;
- Analysis of the main deficiencies of the current SR-HRM and sustainable indicators;
- The relationship between employee relations and SR-HRM.
