Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue focusses on the human dimensions of conservation, spotlighting case studies of localised initiatives which have substantially integrated human well-being outcomes within their design. This Special Issue aims to contribute to conservation impact by featuring case studies of localised conservation initiatives. It will showcase “what works (or does not work) in conservation and why” and thereby, provide a resource of ideas for those working at the frontlines. It will also direct the attention of the academic community to research topics that can create more effective and, therefore, sustainable efforts in the future.

Some topics for consideration include:

- Management of political risks and uncertainty
- Justice, equity, diversity and inclusion
- Using sustainable development agendas as vehicles for conservation
- Reflections on conservation as a social practice and the science of sustainability
- Conceptualisations of sustainable human–nature relationships
