This Special Issue will comprise a selection of papers addressing investigations on lean production and its impact on a wide range of manufacturing-related systems where a human being can play an evitable role in effective and efficient operation. All the papers referring to the misuse of lean tools, techniques, and approaches which can lead to overlooking health-related issues are also welcome. The awareness of the relationship between worker health and lean production among lean practitioners is not always visible, but worth further investigation and discussion. This Special Issue addresses a spectrum of theoretical and practical topics. It provides an excellent forum for exploring frontiers between researchers and practitioners from academia and industry.
