Message from the Guest Editors

Current environmental issues, such as ecosystem deforestation and global climatic change, have led to local and global environmental imbalances, to the point of compromising the present and future of the ecosphere. Human behavior has significant involvement in the breakdown of balance in ecological interrelationships. The environmental impact leaves humanity with troubling challenges, which require a commitment to the search for urgent answers and solutions. Thus, it is urgent to develop competencies to enable the exercise of critical, reflexive, and committed citizenship with pro-environmental awareness and behaviors. Scientific literacy and citizenship are intertwined in the environmental learning, so it is a necessity of society. It is a motivating educational challenge to engage children and young people in the identification of causes and the search for solutions to current serious environmental problems.
