Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue focuses on the sustainable management of sport organizations. It is directed at sport organizations operating in all three sectors, including non-profit, private (market), and government (state) sectors. Across sectors, sport organizations face increasing pressures and expectations from various internal and external stakeholders (e.g., members, employees, consumers, society, other organizations) and are expected to meet at least some of these expectations in order to retain their place within society, the sport system, and the economy. Hence, sustainable organizational management will play a major role in sustaining the viability, performance, and effectiveness of sport organizations. The concept of sustainability explicitly considers all three dimensions of sustainability (i.e., the triple bottom line), including financial/economic, social, and ecological sustainability.
